overview

A modern shape with a nod towards the classic French Pull Marin, Headland is drop shouldered, and designed with positive ease—but uses shoulder and side-seam shaping to keep things from getting overly boxy.

The sweater is knit from the top down. Shoulders are shaped with short rows, angling them downward for a better fit. Front and back are joined at the underarms and the body is worked in the round to the hem. Back hem is lowered and curved with short rows. Sleeves are picked up from the armholes and worked in the round to the cuff.

Choosing a size Headland is designed to fit with 6–8" [15–20 cm] of positive ease at the bust. If you are between sizes, consider choosing the smaller size and adjusting the shaping to maintain the desired ease.

Fabric stretch considerations Download this pdf for additional tips on yarn substitution and selecting a size.

Row gauge considerations If your row gauge is different from the stated gauge, use the depth measurements given in the instructions, rather than the row counts. Make adjustments symmetrically—if you work fewer rows on the upper back, do the same for the front.
